Meeting the challenges of Agriculture and Forestry with Commissioner Bob Odom

A Keithville man was charged recently for attempting to sell another man's livestock at Livestock Producers Sale Barn in south Bossier Parish, according to Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Bob Odom.

Garland Lee Dean, 84, Keithville-Keatchie Road, was charged with one count of failure to notify the Livestock Brand Commission and/or local Sheriff's Office of strayed livestock on his property and one count of unauthorized use of a movable.

The strayed "Mexican roping" steer was first noticed by Department of Agriculture and Forestry livestock brand inspectors Jason LeGrande and Mitch Nezat at the sale barn because it didn't match a set of five other calves being tagged in to sell.

"Careful observation by our brand inspectors helped stop the alleged unauthorized sale of this steer and helped return livestock to its rightful owner," Commissioner Odom said. "Our employees work sale barns every day to prevent situations like this from escalating."

LeGrande and Nezat contacted fellow brand inspector Carnie Burcham to begin looking for the steer's legal owner. The owner, Ray Forcier, also of Keithville, was located and provided identifying information about the steer to brand inspectors. Forcier also reported a second missing steer.

Burcham said the Caddo Parish Sheriff's Office Stock Patrol picked up the steer at the sale barn after Forcier confirmed it was taken there without his consent. The second missing steer was found on Dean's property and returned to the owner.

"Dean has been warned at least three times to notify the Sheriff's Office or the Brand Commission when strayed livestock is on his property," Burcham explained.

Odom issued a stiff warning to anyone who might consider selling an animal that wandered onto his/her property.

"We're trying to get a clear message across to everyone living in rural communities where things like this happen. Just because a cow or horse shows up on your property does not mean you can claim the animal and sell it at a sale barn," Odom said.

"To follow the law, you must properly notify authorities so they can return the livestock to the owner and enforce loose livestock ordinances if necessary."

Both Odom and Burcham cited a Louisiana statute that states anyone who attempts to sell livestock in the name of someone other than the actual owner could be charged with theft of livestock.

Larry Allen, an owner of Livestock Producers Sale Barn, 191 Sligo Road, Bossier City, said he welcomes the help of alert brand inspectors working at his barn.

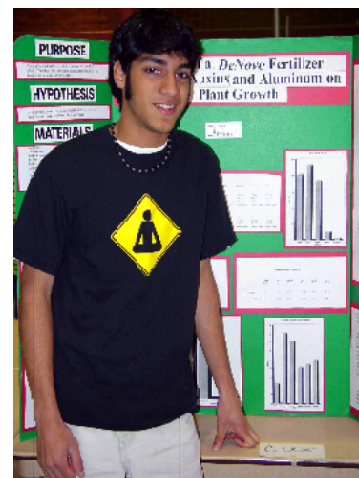

"I want the inspectors assigned to my barn to arrest violators as needed anywhere, on this property or wherever they are found. This barn has been victimized with cattle thefts, burglaries, hot checks and more," he said. "Where evidence is present and the case is clear, I want them to arrest whoever is responsible to discourage further unlawful activity."

Burcham worked with Caddo Parish Sheriff's Deputy Doyle Smith to recover the steer and serve Dean's charges.

Anyone with information regarding livestock theft or other farm-related crimes is asked to contact the agriculture Crimestoppers hotline at 1-800-558-9741 or their local Sheriff's Office.

Forestry projects funding available through the Urban and Community Forestry Grant Program

Federal matching funds are available for community forestry projects through the Urban and Community Forestry Grant Program, according to Commissioner of Agriculture and Forestry Bob Odom.

Groups eligible for the funds include city, parish or state agencies, private non-profit green groups and public education institutions. The grant program aims to implement strategies that establish new, and strengthen existing community forestry programs. It also strives to increase the number and diversity of community residents informed and involved in community forestry endeavors.

Application forms for the program, as well as additional information, are available from the Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry's eight district offices or from Bonnie Stine, P.O. Box 1628, Baton Rouge, LA 70821, 225-925-4500. Applications must be submitted to the department by Friday, June 7.

Louisiana's share of the federal funding this year is $323,213. This funding, through the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Forest Service, is available on a 50-50 cost-share basis with the eligible groups.

"Guidelines established by the program require that projects must benefit trees on public property," Odom said. "Local matching funds may be in the form of either cash or in-kind services such as volunteer labor, materials or equipment needed to carry out the project."

The grant program, in its 12th year, has funded some 450 projects throughout Louisiana. Each year about 50 groups receive the grant money, with priority given to first-time applicants, Odom added.

A grant-writing workshop for interested persons will be held from 10 a.m. until noon Friday, April 19, in the auditorium at the Department of Agriculture and Forestry in Baton Rouge. For more information or to reserve a space at the workshop, contact Bonnie Stine at 225-925-4500.

Grant applicants that receive funding will be notified of their selection August 9. The grant period runs from Oct. 1, 2002 to Sept. 30, 2003.

EPA spraying regulations will hinder Louisiana farmers

Proposed changes in crop spraying regulations by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency could hamper Louisiana farmers, particularly those who grow rice.

The proposed label changes for crop chemicals by the EPA take into account the size of chemical droplets released from aerial applicators, as well as wind conditions under which crop protection products are applied. The changes could limit spray days to periods when wind gusts are between three and 10 miles per hour and forbid spraying into “aquatic environments.”

“The proposed ban on spraying over aquatic areas would not only be devastating, but impossible for the state’s rice industry,” said Dr. Ron Harrell, commodity director for the Louisiana Farm Bureau. “This presents a problem to rice farmers since most of their spraying is done over flooded rice field.”

Cotton, sugarcane and grain farmers also are concerned, as a report containing these changes from the EPA’s Office of Pesticide Programs suggests extending the no-spray buffer zone around many fields from 10 feet to 300 feet.

“In many cases that means taking 290 feet of cropland out of production,” Harrell continued. Spread over more than three million acres of crops, that’s going to add up to a lot of acreage.”

The EPA’s proposed changes stem from concerns that drifting pesticides may be a potential health hazard. Harrell said he is not convinced the EPA has done sufficient research to justify the proposed label changes.

“The EPA has not satisfactorily demonstrated the existence of unreasonable adverse effects on the environment or on health under current spraying practices to justify additional label restrictions,” Harrell continued. The risks associated with pesticide drift must be scientifically determined and assessed before effective programs can be developed.”

Harrell said the Louisiana Farm Bureau submitted comments to the EPA at the end of March suggesting several of the restrictions be changed or eliminated altogether. He said Farm Bureau is not the only group with an interest in stopping the label changes.

Michael Hensgens, business manager for G&H Seed Company and an Environmental Regulatory subcommittee member for the USA Rice Federation, said the regulations would severely damage an already fragile rice farm economy.

“Some of the regulations state you can’t apply products in any aquatic environments,” Hensgens said. That’s very difficult in a rice culture where the crop sits in an aquatic environment all the time. The proposed regulations really cause a challenge there.” Hensgens said he also feels the impetus behind the report is suspect.

“They (EPA) polled the states’ regulatory agencies, asking about the number of drift complaints,” Hensgens said. Those regulatory agencies then submitted their number of complaints, substantiated or not. The EPA has assumed each one of these complaints has merit, which makes the problem seem bigger then it really might be.”

Ground and aerial applicators also would be impacted by the proposed regulations. Many already use a number of methods to control drift, ensuring the product lands where it’s supposed to while minimizing use of many of the more expensive crop protection products. Hensgens said everything from satellites to custom-made nozzles keep pesticides where they belong.

Hensgens also said the EPA’s “one-size-fits-all” regulations are untenable since spray conditions differ from state to state and even parish to parish.

“When we seed, for instance, we do so at 30 to 40 feet above the ground,” he said. If we were lower than that, it would change the spread pattern of the seed and it wouldn’t work. There needs to be consideration of different crops and different environments applications are made under.”

The Farm Bureau’s Harrell said the EPA’s regulations are further unjustified because the state already has existing programs in place to prevent drift.

“Our farmers use sound management practices in pesticide applications to prevent such problems,” he said. Louisiana requires applicators to undergo intensive training and educational programs. Our farmers pay close attention to minimize off-site drift, not only for environmental reasons, but also for worker safety and economic reasons.”
